Buckfield Reminiscences No. 12.

[Written for the Advertiser.]

BY C. F. WHITMAN, ESQ.

Temperance societies began to be formed in different parts of the State as early as 1827. Buckfield had its society as did also Norway, Paris and other towns in the county.

In 1812 at an adjourned town meeting in Buckfield on the 23d of April a vote was passed "that at the change in the location of a road leading from Tobias Ricker, Jr.'s to David Gammon's house, there be no ardent spirit made use of at the town's expense." This was a good healthy sign as a "starter."

The curious may be interested to know that York, Maine, incorporated as a city in 1642 and said to be the first American city, passed a prohibitory liquor law in 1680 which was substantially the Maine Liquor Law of the present day.

The Oxford County Temperance Society was organized in 1829 with Luther Cary of Turner as President and Sam'l F. Brown of Buckfield as Secretary. All members signed the following pledge: "The undersigned being desirous of extending their influence in the cause of Temperance, and adopting the principles of total abstinence, from the use of ardent spirits hereby form ourselves into an association to be called 'The Union Temperance Society of the County of Oxford.'" Among the signers were Henry Farewell and Virgil D. Parris of Buckfield, Hannibal Hamlin and Timothy J. Carter of Paris, Levi Whitman of Norway and Charles Whitman of Waterford. Parris and Carter were afterward Members of Congress and Hannibal Hamlin has been Governor, Representative, Senator and Vice President of the United States. This was the class of men who in Oxford County. At the organization of the county society, delegates from the town organizations reported more or less opposition. The report from Buckfield was, "opposition great to temperance reform by political demagogues followed by their supporters half drunk." This must have been too powerful an influence to struggle against for shortly after the Buckfield society was reported dead. In a meeting of the county society in 1833 a committee of one or more from each town was chosen to procure names. The Buckfield members of the committee were Seth Stetson, Zadoc Long and Hon. Asa Cushing. The next year at the annual meeting of the Maine State Temperance Society held at Augusta, much oppisition as usual was reported from Buckfield. One deacon both drinks and sells rum."

There has ever been a strong temperance sentiment in that town which was always promoted and encouraged by the best citizens, but it cannot be denied that there were such at least on that other side. I never saw the time that temperance work was not needed there, as indeed hardly anywhere else. Of late years Buckfield has very much improved, and now there is no town in the county its superior in temperance work.

Temperance used to be a disturbing element in politics in this State long before there was any break in party lines. It troubled the Democrats then as it is troubling the Republicans in the country at large now, and it was finally one of the means by which the Republican party was broken into pieces in Maine, when a part with the Anti-Slavery Whigs and Free-Soilers united and formed the Republican party which has ruled the State for about 30 years.

Buckfield was originally

A Solid Democratic Town.

In 1844 the vote for President was 252 for Polk, the little, and only 46 for Henry Clay, that mighty orator and magnificent man, who ought to have been President, and would have been but for a few one-ideaed and impracticable men in New York, who voted for Birney, the Abolition candidate, and thus gave the State to Polk. At the election of Polk they lost all, for Texas was at once annexed. It would have been better for the Democrats had Polk been defeated, for such men as Thos. H. Benton and Silas Wright were set aside, and Calhoun and other leaders of this stamp in the South took the lead, and then began that division in the Democratic party which finally split it asunder and drove it out of power for a number of years.

That year Birney got only 8 votes in Buckfield. At the September election Jacob Leonard, the Whig candidate received about 50 votes, while the Democratic vote was divided about equally between two candidates, one of which ran on a temperance ticket. The Democrats were generally united on Governor and Members of Congress, but when it came to Representative to the Legislature, there was usually music in the air.

In the course of ten years a general break-up took place. The Missouri Compromise had been annulled and the country was in a ferment. Anson P. Morrill was the Temperance candidate for Governor in 1854. He was also the candidate of the Know Nothings and Free Soilers. The vote that year in Buckfield was as follows: Governor—Parris, 194; Morrill, 179; "Shep" Cary, 7; Reed (Whig), 11. Whiggery had about gone to seed in that town. The town being classed with Woodstock, Sidney Perham and O. Nute were the candidates for Representative to the Legislature. The former had 189 votes and the latter 202. The vote of Woodstock settled the contest in favor of Sidney Perham.

Col. Wm. K. Kimball

was the most popular candidate in that town on the Democratic ticket. He ran against Hon. Perry for Congress. The vote stood: Kimball, 204; Perry, 181. The Coalition ticket won and Anson P. Morrill became Governor, and John J. Perry was elected to Congress.

The next year the Democrats were united and Wells their candidate for Governor, had 232 votes, while Anson P. Morrill had but 170, and Reed, the Whig candidate, had only five votes. For Representative, Washington Heald had 233, while Thos. Chase had 170 votes, the same number as the head of the ticket on which he ran, as a candidate. Woodstock came to the rescue and Chase was elected. The next year a new organization changed in Buckfield. National issues had swallowed up in a great measure the Temperance question.

Seth Sampson created more trouble, in Buckfield than all others combined. It is said that he worked up most of his prosecutions himself with the aid of a spotter. But however that may be, he was the best hated man, I remember to have seen. He was shot at once on Paris Hill but the bullet of his enemy narrowly passed by his head. I have often heard him boast of his having enemies. "Show me a man," said Sampson "who hasn't any enemies and I will show you a cipher." A good story is told about one Mayhew, whom an ardent temperance man once interviewed, hoping to get some evidence in order to institute legal proceedings against a rum-seller. He was "several sheets in the wind" and it was thought that the desired information could be easily obtained. After cautiously approaching the subject, Mayhew was asked where he got his rum. "Can you keep a secret Mr. Cole?" "I can" was the quick response. "So can I," retorted Mayhew. It is needless to say that Cole had his labor for his pains, that time at least.

East Buckfield was always a stronghold for temperance and outside of the village more temperance and religious meetings were held there than in all the rest of the town. The good people of that section and of —rendered famous as being the home of Solon Chase, who first yoked "Them Steers" and held the Greenback plow—will always have my respect and gratitude. No better people can be found anywhere. I taught school in both places and know them thoroughly and well.

Chase's Mills

William Bicknell was the oracle at East Buckfield as was Solon Chase at the Mills. The former lived in Hartford, but it was in the vicinity of East Buckfield. He rarely missed any of the meetings. He is one of the stanchest temperance men in our State.

One of the first temperance meetings in which I took part was held in the town of Hartford. At that meeting a member of the present City Government of Lewiston signed the pledge, which I believe he has kept ever since.

The most efficient work in temperance since my recollection has been done through the agency of the Reform Clubs and Buckfield I judge has been more benefitted by the movement that gave rise to their formation than all other temperance organizations, but in this I may be mistaken. It has had a temperance society of some kind, and sometimes several of them for years. I do not recollect the time when Buckfield was without a temperance organization.

[Written for the Advertiser.]

Phillip's Gore.

I had hoped to be able to give the names of those persons, either voters or tax payers, who became citizens of Otisfield in consequence of the annexation of the Gore, but the necessary facts have not come to hand. I can give, however, the names of all the persons whose names appear on the tax roll in 1804 for the first time. It appears that they were not taxed in 1803 although the fact of annexation was complete in February of that year.

The following are found on the tax roll in Otisfield for the first time in 1804:

Robert Anderson, Furnum Beverly, Stanton Bennett, Daniel Bennett, John Burns, John Chadbourn, Thomas Edes, Ezekiel Eastman, Jr., Enoch Edwards, Benjamin Farrington, Nathaniel Garey, Richard Gardner, Levi Gilson, Henry Gulp, John Holden, 3d, William Jordan, Timothy Jordan, Charles Johnson, Widow Fletcher Ingalls, Asa Kneeland, Josiah Leavitt, Daniel Lovell, John Lombard, David Lombard, Edward Lovell, Joseph Morton, Joseph Mayberry, Levi Patch, Samuel Pitts, Aaron Phillips, Reuben Rich, Benjamin Rich, Samuel Rich, Ezekiel Rich, jr., William Rich, Ross, Barnabas Sawyer, David Sawyer, Jonathan Sawyer, Daniel Sawyer, jr., Joseph Scribner, jr., Levi Scribner, Nathaniel Scribner, Ebenezer Scribner, Daniel Scribner, William Spurr, Benjamin Stevens, Jones Stevens, Widow Walker, Peter Wentworth, Zechariah Watson, Samuel Wardwell, John Winslow, Joshua Winship, Total 55.

The widows Ingalls, Scribner and Walker are mentioned in the above list as tax payers in 1804.

Mrs. Ingalls was the widow of Fletcher Ingalls and daughter of John Knight, commonly known as Snappy Knight.

Mrs. Scribner was without doubt the widow of Capt. Daniel Scribner, who though a signer of the petition for annexation in the fore part of the year 1802 was burned to death in the October following.

Mrs. Walker was the widow of Geo. Walker, who lived on the Jere Sawyer place.

Charles Johnson was a trader on Meeting House Hill but was in trade as early as 1804? Mr. Swett, the father of Col. Swett of Paris, was the first trader on the Hill. John Holden, 3d, Joseph Mayberry and Levi Patch were well known citizens of Otisfield. Of the others who are named in the list resided in that part of Otisfield which on the incorporation of Harrison in 1805 became part of that town. A some resided in that part of the town which became a part of Waterford. But it is left for such persons now living as have knowledge of the facts to tell which and how many of the fifty-five tax payers in 1804 were. I think perhaps 37 or 38 lived on the Gore.

Persons of middle age now living will remember Barnabas Sawyer. His father Jonathan Sawyer, senior, was the first settler on the Gore locality. At one time the surface of the country presented an almost unbroken forest. The villages of Norway, Oxford and Paris were yet unborn. The country abounded in game as mink, musk rat, beaver, bear and occasionally a moose, and very rarely a nondescript, which the settlers called catamount or panther.

Barnabas Sawyer, in his younger days, followed hunting and trapping not for sport but with a view to the profits. His operations extended along the banks of the Little Androscoggin and Crooked rivers and their tributaries, and around Pennesseewassee, Moose, Saturday and Thompson ponds. Tradition says there was an Indian trail along the streams and between the ponds mentioned before the settlement of the country by white men. Mr. Sawyer made the business of hunting profitable. He once shot a catamount on the shore of Little pond near the present town line between Albany and Waterford.

He married Sarah, daughter of Ezekiel Rich, senior, and became one of the wealthiest men in town, perhaps the most wealthy of all. His history is an apt illustration of the uncertainty of the wheel of Fortune. He engaged in the lumber business cutting and hauling the logs which were run down Crooked river to Saccarappa, where he sold them or manufactured them into lumber. In the course of his business transactions with Saccarappa lumbermen he signed notes for their accommodation by which he lost $14,000 at one time, a calamity from which he never recovered. After the loss of his property his three daughters, Martha, Eunice and Mary D., or Delia as sometimes called, went to Portland to earn something towards supporting the family. The young ladies worked for Hayden Row on Market Square at braiding straw. The youngest of the three was for many years the forewoman of the shop. Afterwards they kept a boarding house in the city of Lowell and finally were settled in the vicinity of Duck pond in the town of Westbrook. Delia married Josiah M. Tarr of Boston, after which they lived quite a number of years in Wisconsin, but finally moved to Texas about 1872. Martha and Eunice never married.

Nearly four years ago I had the pleasure of meeting the ladies Martha and Eunice Sawyer at the residence of the latter's niece in Monroe County, Wisconsin, where they were visiting. Martha at that time was past her 83d year, and her sister was perhaps ten years younger. Both were possessed of more than common intelligence, and neither of them showed the usual signs of old age. Martha possessed a queerly presence and dignity of character rarely found among women, and her memory was wonderful. It had then been fifty years since she resided on the Gore but she gave me the names of as many as thirty-seven families mentioning all the first settlers, and mentioned the names of as many as two hundred or two hundred and fifty persons who lived on the Gore at an early day. Of many families she could give the names of all the children and tell where they married; but of a few she could only give the names of the parents and tell where they lived. Of course she was unable to give dates, and it is not surprising that mistakes should occasionally be found in historical data so collected.

There is an unusual amount of difficulty in getting reliable information regarding the families of the early settlers on the Gore. As they belonged to no town, the meagre information usually found on town records regarding their early settlers is wanting in their case. Some of the families came and went and no person now living can tell whence or which. Others who lived on the Gore all their lives left no descendents. And of those who left descendents some can give the town information concerning their grandparents or their families.

In order to show how easy it is to make mistakes as well as to make a correction which ought to be made, let me refer to an article in the ADVERTISER of Jan. 8th in which the writer says he can remember Mr. Shepard to whom the grant of the town of Hebron was made. Now we all know that Uncle Daniel is generally very accurate and he has a large story-house of facts to draw upon, but in this case he is considerably "off." Mr. Shepard never lived in Otisfield and he died before 1791. As appears by the Court records in Portland, Mr. Shepard had executed a deed of the Gore to the Prescotts. It was duly signed and witnessed but was not acknowledged. On the first Tuesday of January 1791 proof of the execution of said deed "made by Alexander Shepard, jr., now deceased" was made in open court. Mr. Shepard was a resident of the town of Newton, Mass.

I do not refer to this matter in any sense for the purpose of showing the writer to be in error only as we are dealing with matters of history it is necessary that the record should be correct. The information about this early settlers on the Gore, did not give me what is written above about their father, Barnabas Sawyer, except the bare fact that he took a Gore as one time. The Misses Sawyer Martha and Eunice, went to Missouri in 1883 to visit relatives and I regret to add that they died there a few months after their arrival, the change in water, climate, etc., no doubt hastening their death.

NOTE.—In the Act of Annexation the names of Captains Parker and Brackett appear as parties with Jonathan Swan in 1771, but it is evidently a mistake. It should be Captains Parker and Prescott. This Act was passed in 1833, thirty-two yeaas after the town line was run. But the Proprietors records kept in 1771 do not contain the name of any Captain Brackett, but the records show that Capt. William Prescott and Capt. Nathaniel Parker were employed to run out lines on lots.

Concluded.

Obelisks.

BY PROF. JOHN MOORE.

Egypt is the monumental land of the earth. Its monuments are all historical. The design was to perpetuate in permanent forms the manners, customs and future ages. The obelisks are among the most prominent of the stone records. There were many of these at Heliopolis on the On of the Bible. It was there that the great University of Egypt was to which Moses went to study from Greece and other countries. Plato studied there thirteen years, and without doubt Moses was educated at that highest seat of learning.

In On stood the celebrated Temple of the Sun, to which the Obelisks seem to have been attached. Of them all only one remains standing in its original position, the others having been removed to different places. Several are in Rome. The largest is that near the Church of St. John Lateran. It was brought from Heliopolis to Alexandria by the Emperor Constantine, and was afterward conveyed to Rome by Constantius, who erected it in the Circus Maximus. The height of the shaft is 105 feet and 7 inches and weighs 455 tons. It bears the name of Thomes the Fourth, and dates back to the fifteenth century B. C. The oldest of this class of monuments dates back to 2020 B. C. and is 67 feet high. The two commonly called Cleopatra's Needles were brought to Alexandria about 2000 years ago. One fell some time after its erection and remained for ages mostly buried in the sand. It was presented to George Fourth of England in 1820, but was not removed till a few years since and now stands in London. The other which remained standing was presented to the United States by Ishmael Pasha, the father of the present Khedive. This now stands in the Central Park, New York. It is nearly 70 feet high and weighs 200 tons. Its conveyance to this country and erection where it stands were a grand achievement of engineering skill and enterprise. The hieroglyphics covering its sides have been deciphered. No doubt Joseph and Moses often gazed upon it.

One of the obelisks which stood originally before the Temple of the Sun was removed to Rome by Augustus nineteen years B. C. That which stands near St. Peters was brought to Rome by Caligula. It is 83 feet high. At the time it was placed in its present position the Pope issued an order that no one should speak audibly during the process of elevating it on its pedestal. A great multitude assembled and the work of raising it began, but it was soon seen that the ropes stretched so much by the condemning mass that the attempt would be likely to fail. There was the order of the Pope and death threatened to any one that might utter a word. At a critical moment a sailor present shouted at the top of his voice—"Wet the ropes." That was a new idea that came just in time. The ropes were wet and contracted sufficiently to enable the workmen to raise it to its proper position. The Pope pardoned and rewarded the sailor. There are said to be thirteen of these shafts at Rome.

There is one in Paris that once stood at Luxor, which was erected by Rameses Second, of the nineteenth dynasty, and dates back to 1311 B. C.

At the time of the arrival of the obelisk in New York some papers sneeringly said: "Why make so much fuss about a big stone?" They could see nothing in it because they did not know much, and were destitute of the imagination and inspiration of a truly intelligent and thoughtful mind. To the antiquary, the historian, the poet, and the Bible student the monument is full of meaning and suggestiveness.

The Chinese Question.

We reprint the following from The Hamptonia, a school paper printed by the students at the New Hampton (N. H.) Institute. Mr. Crane graduated from the Institute a few days since, is a fine young man, and we have no doubt he states his views of the Chinese question exactly as it seems to him.

SEATTLE, W. T., Oct. 22, 1885.

MR. EDITOR.—In compliance with your request, that I should contribute something to the columns of your valuable paper, I have concluded to give my views on the Chinese question. I am well aware that my ideas on this subject will come in direct conflict with the expressed sentiment of the great East.

While to you the subject may seem of small importance, to us it is one of great magnitude. We are apt to view riot, famine, war, or any other great evil with indifference while confined to some distant place; but when we see it approaching our own doors our indifference vanishes and we look for the remedy. For years this coast has been cursed by the presence of a horde of heathen vampires who are gradually sapping the life blood of our national institutions. From experience gained by extensive travel on this coast, I wish to call your attention to a few of the existing facts, trusting thereby to open the eyes of a few, at least, of your readers.

The population of China is estimated at $400,000,000; that of the United States at $55,000,000. At the rate emigration has been coming to our shores, the last few years, our population will be duplicated by a class who are cheap producers and non-consumers. The Chinaman buys in a foreign market, and lives on what would starve a white man. The Chinaman has no family to support, hence the town of Hebron was made. Now we all know that Uncle Daniel is generally the cutting and hauling of logs which were run down Crooked river to Saccarappa, where he sold them or manufactured them into lumber. In the course of his business transactions with Saccarappa lumbermen he signed notes for their accommodation by which he lost $14,000 at one time, a calamity from which he never recovered. After the loss of his property his three daughters, Martha, Eunice and Mary D., or Delia as sometimes called, went to Portland to earn something towards supporting the family. The young ladies worked for Hayden Row on Market Square at braiding straw. The youngest of the three was for many years the forewoman of the shop. Afterwards they kept a boarding house in the city of Lowell and finally were settled in the vicinity of Duck pond in the town of Westbrook. Delia married Josiah M. Tarr of Boston, after which they lived quite a number of years in Wisconsin, but finally moved to Texas about 1872. Martha and Eunice never married.

Nearly four years ago I had the pleasure of meeting the ladies Martha and Eunice Sawyer at the residence of the latter's niece in Monroe County, Wisconsin, where they were visiting. Martha at that time was past her 83d year, and her sister was perhaps ten years younger. Both were possessed of more than common intelligence, and neither of them showed the usual signs of old age. Martha possessed a queerly presence and dignity of character rarely found among women, and her memory was wonderful. It had then been fifty years since she resided on the Gore but she gave me the names of as many as thirty-seven families mentioning all the first settlers, and mentioned the names of as many as two hundred or two hundred and fifty persons who lived on the Gore at an early day. Of many families she could give the names of all the children and tell where they married; but of a few she could only give the names of the parents and tell where they lived. Of course she was unable to give dates, and it is not surprising that mistakes should occasionally be found in historical data so collected.

There is an unusual amount of difficulty in getting reliable information regarding the families of the early settlers on the Gore. As they belonged to no town, the meagre information usually found on town records regarding their early settlers is wanting in their case. Some of the families came and went and no person now living can tell whence or which. Others who lived on the Gore all their lives left no descendents. And of those who left descendents some can give the town information concerning their grandparents or their families.

In order to show how easy it is to make mistakes as well as to make a correction which ought to be made, let me refer to an article in the ADVERTISER of Jan. 8th in which the writer says he can remember Mr. Shepard to whom the grant of the town of Hebron was made. Now we all know that Uncle Daniel is generally very accurate and he has a large story-house of facts to draw upon, but in this case he is considerably "off." Mr. Shepard never lived in Otisfield and he died before 1791. As appears by the Court records in Portland, Mr. Shepard had executed a deed of the Gore to the Prescotts. It was duly signed and witnessed but was not acknowledged. On the first Tuesday of January 1791 proof of the execution of said deed "made by Alexander Shepard, jr., now deceased" was made in open court. Mr. Shepard was a resident of the town of Newton, Mass.

I do not refer to this matter in any sense for the purpose of showing the writer to be in error only as we are dealing with matters of history it is necessary that the record should be correct. The information about this early settlers on the Gore, did not give me what is written above about their father, Barnabas Sawyer, except the bare fact that he took a Gore as one time. The Misses Sawyer Martha and Eunice, went to Missouri in 1883 to visit relatives and I regret to add that they died there a few months after their arrival, the change in water, climate, etc., no doubt hastening their death.

NOTE.—In the Act of Annexation the names of Captains Parker and Brackett appear as parties with Jonathan Swan in 1771, but it is evidently a mistake. It should be Captains Parker and Prescott. This Act was passed in 1833, thirty-two yeaas after the town line was run. But the Proprietors records kept in 1771 do not contain the name of any Captain Brackett, but the records show that Capt. William Prescott and Capt. Nathaniel Parker were employed to run out lines on lots.

Concluded.

Obelisks.

BY PROF. JOHN MOORE.

Egypt is the monumental land of the earth. Its monuments are all historical. The design was to perpetuate in permanent forms the manners, customs and future ages. The obelisks are among the most prominent of the stone records. There were many of these at Heliopolis on the On of the Bible. It was there that the great University of Egypt was to which Moses went to study from Greece and other countries. Plato studied there thirteen years, and without doubt Moses was educated at that highest seat of learning.

In On stood the celebrated Temple of the Sun, to which the Obelisks seem to have been attached. Of them all only one remains standing in its original position, the others having been removed to different places. Several are in Rome. The largest is that near the Church of St. John Lateran. It was brought from Heliopolis to Alexandria by the Emperor Constantine, and was afterward conveyed to Rome by Constantius, who erected it in the Circus Maximus. The height of the shaft is 105 feet and 7 inches and weighs 455 tons. It bears the name of Thomes the Fourth, and dates back to the fifteenth century B. C. The oldest of this class of monuments dates back to 2020 B. C. and is 67 feet high. The two commonly called Cleopatra's Needles were brought to Alexandria about 2000 years ago. One fell some time after its erection and remained for ages mostly buried in the sand. It was presented to George Fourth of England in 1820, but was not removed till a few years since and now stands in London. The other which remained standing was presented to the United States by Ishmael Pasha, the father of the present Khedive. This now stands in the Central Park, New York. It is nearly 70 feet high and weighs 200 tons. Its conveyance to this country and erection where it stands were a grand achievement of engineering skill and enterprise. The hieroglyphics covering its sides have been deciphered. No doubt Joseph and Moses often gazed upon it.

One of the obelisks which stood originally before the Temple of the Sun was removed to Rome by Augustus nineteen years B. C. That which stands near St. Peters was brought to Rome by Caligula. It is 83 feet high. At the time it was placed in its present position the Pope issued an order that no one should speak audibly during the process of elevating it on its pedestal. A great multitude assembled and the work of raising it began, but it was soon seen that the ropes stretched so much by the condemning mass that the attempt would be likely to fail. There was the order of the Pope and death threatened to any one that might utter a word. At a critical moment a sailor present shouted at the top of his voice—"Wet the ropes." That was a new idea that came just in time. The ropes were wet and contracted sufficiently to enable the workmen to raise it to its proper position. The Pope pardoned and rewarded the sailor. There are said to be thirteen of these shafts at Rome.

There is one in Paris that once stood at Luxor, which was erected by Rameses Second, of the nineteenth dynasty, and dates back to 1311 B. C.

At the time of the arrival of the obelisk in New York some papers sneeringly said: "Why make so much fuss about a big stone?" They could see nothing in it because they did not know much, and were destitute of the imagination and inspiration of a truly intelligent and thoughtful mind. To the antiquary, the historian, the poet, and the Bible student the monument is full of meaning and suggestiveness.

"Old Isaac & Son," of South Woodstock, Me., have something of interest to say to our readers. They keep in stock a large number of caskets and burial outfits—the largest and best stock by all odds in this county. Positively you can save money by buying of I. W. Andrews & Son, South Woodstock, Me. See adv.

Said a candid business man recently, "It is worth $100 a year to any town to have it understood that the officers must submit a printed report of their doings." No one can gainsay the assertion. Any man smart enough to get elected third selectman can figure a town out of debt, or bridge over "dark places," if the report is only to be read amid confusion, or not even to be read as in some towns. But with a printed report in hand, a man of ordinary intelligence can sit down in the quiet of his home and satisfy himself whether or not his money is being wasted, depreciated in value, or endangered by the administration of town affairs. We would invite officers to consider our claims on their patronage, and at the same time state that we are prepared to print town reports in as good shape, as quickly, and as cheaply as any other office. Estimates of cost of printing town reports furnished on application to the ADVERTISER Office.

Information Wanted.

Oxford, Me., Feb. 1, 1886.

EDITOR OF ADVERTISER.—I see by your criticism of the Commissioners' and Treasurer's report that you have examined the books and vouchers.

Will you be kind enough to state if you remember what the item of $139.17 paid Clerk of Courts, balance due, bill of 1884 was for. Also did you examine the return made by the Clerk as required by law? I have not seen that the Clerk has turned any money into the County although he has received $486.63 from the County for fees, leaving but $263.37 to derived from all other sources.

TAX PAYER.

We cannot say what the item for $139.17 paid Clerk of Courts was for, notwithstanding our examination was for the year 1884. We fail to find any return made by the Clerk of Court. We cannot say how much money has been turned into the County Treasury from this source, however, we have the same curiosity of "Tax Payer," and would like information in this matter.—[ED.

BETHEL.

Mr. Hastings, our genial postmaster, invited me in to see his herd of deer (Cervus Americanus.) He has three, two does and one buck, named Pansy, Nan and Jack. They are graceful creatures and quite tame. He has rooms in his barn fitted up very conveniently for them and they seem to be quite contented in their confinement. Their food consists of coarse hay mixed with weeds and brakes, also bread, milk, etc. Mr. Hastings kept them in the woods for a year before bringing them home.

A great interest is manifested in the Salvation meetings. Many have professed a change and stand boldly up and acknowledge Him, whom they have always denied before, believing that if they acknowledge Him before men, He will acknowledge them at last in the presence of God and the holy angels.

It may be of interest to some of your readers to know the way Mr. Bancroft was killed by the tree last week. It was a birch tree about 18 inches through and it fell half down, almost balancing upon a smaller tree. It was not cut close off the stump, held by some splinters and in cutting it clear he had to stand nearly behind it on account of another tree standing near by. When he cut it clear it slid back ten feet or more taking him with it against another tree, jamming and cutting the lower part of his bowels. He lived two hours in great agony, dying of hemorrhage.

Thomas E. Twitchell, one of the business men of Portland, died at his residence on High Street Sunday morning, aged nearly 62 years. Mr. Twitchell was born in Bethel, May 15, 1824. Until the age of 16 he lived on the farm, when he entered the store of Robert A. Chapman at Bethel Hill. He remained in this employment for several years. While he lived at Bethel he was postmaster for one term. In 1852 he was appointed mail agent on the Grand Trunk road, being the first mail agent to serve on that road. In the summer of 1853 he went to Portland and went into the wholesale grocery business. He continued in the grocery business till 1868. In 1870 he went into the dry goods business. Two or three years ago he again went into the wholesale grocery business. He was twice married. His first wife was Miss Barker of Bethel, who bore him two children, a son and daughter. The son, Fritz H., is now in the treasurer's office of the Worumbo Woolen Mills, Bath. The daughter is not living. For his second wife Mr. Twitchell married a daughter of Robert A. Chapman, of Bethel. By her he had two daughters, Alice and Emma, both of whom are attending Abbott Academy, Andover, Mass. The only living brother of the deceased is John Q. Twitchell, of the firm of Twitchell, Champlin & Co. Two sisters, one, Mrs. French, living in Haverhill, Mass., the other Miss Salome, formerly a teacher at Bradford Academy, Mass., living at Bethel, and a mother, aged 85, also living at Bethel, complete the list of the immediate relatives of the deceased.

A runaway reported in our streets last week. No damage.

A story is going the rounds in the papers of a sell that was played on a literary society which met last week in Portland with Dr. Thayer, formerly of this town. Judge Goddard and Dr. Hill, Ex-President of Harvard College, presented a quasi-medical subject which they claimed to have seen in German and Italian papers, as the prevention of intoxication by inoculation as Pasteur says hydrophobia can be. The theory was to transfuse the blood of a drunken man into the veins of a gorilla and then infuse the gorilla blood into the veins of a sober man thereby allowing him to drink as much liquor as he chooses without getting intoxicated. After the essay it was soberly discussed by the learned members of the fraternity. When the coffee and salad came in someway it was learned that the literate Lad been imposed upon and that the pretended discovery was a sham. The society are now thinking of some way to pay off Judge Goddard and Dr. Hill.

The trees, of which our village is so proud, presented a very beautiful appearance Saturday, covered with ice and snow, but their weight is breaking the large limbs and it is feared a number of them will be injured.

The storm beat about the church tower so as to obstruct and stop the town clock and it had to be thawed out twice.

Your compositor made me say last week that Frank M. Cole had been very sick. It should have been Mrs. Frank M. Cole.

A little son of Chandler Ethredge, formerly of Bryant's Pond now of Lynn, Mass., recently procured five dollars by some means with which he purchased two half fare tickets to Bryant's Pond for himself and another boy about the same age. Arriving at Bryant's Pond, the Ethredge boy was recognized and a despatch was sent to Lynn notifying the parents of the runaways. Money was immediately sent to defray the expenses of the other boy back to Lynn and the next day he was placed in charge of the conductor and sent home. Mr. Ethredge sent directions to have his boy taken to his sister's, who resides near the village, but in a few days money was also sent for his return and he was placed in charge of the conductor and started for Lynn, but little Earl evidently liked Bryant's Pond society the best, so watching [illegible] eye at South Paris, and hiding behind the fence until the train had left, he came out and purchased a luncheon and when the afternoon train came up he again took passage for Bryant's Pond. The next day he was again put on board the cars and this time they succeeded in getting him home. The boy was about nine years of age.

WEST PARIS.

The Universalist Circle met at Judkin's Hall last Wednesday evening in a masquerade entertainment. Most of the ladies were enveloped in a sheet and pillow case dress and so disguised that but few were recognized, and those only by their gait and form. After the grand march led by F. A. Young, the masks were removed and it was amusing to notice how strangely the company got mixed up. A pie and coffee supper was gotten up by the ladies, which was an important factor to the company present. E. E. Judkins, our native dyspeptic, declared he had improved his condition by eating four suppers and would recommend it to others. Our genial neighbor, Samuel W. Dunham tried hard to get an opportunity to kiss the cooks and got within a half a pie of the job, when the capacity of his stomach gave out. And while his lips anxiously hankered for the job his stomach would stand no more stuffing, an unfortunate dilemma. After the feasting was over the younger portion of the company tripped the light fantastic toe to the music of an organ played by one of our young ladies present. The music was voted superior to that furnished by an orchestra from a neighboring town at a recent assembly. This is no place for imposition. We noticed present O. S. and H. H. Andrews, son and grandson of Levi Andrews of this town. Mr. Andrews informs me that it had been 23 yrs. since he revisited his old home.

Married at the residence of the bride's father, F. A. Young, last Sunday evening by the Rev. Alexander Hill, James A. Brooks of Deering to Hattie A. Young, of this place. The wedding was an interesting occasion, some forty invited friends and relatives being present. The bride was handsomely dressed in white satin and lace with natural flowers, and the bride-groom in a rich black suit. After the marriage ceremony there was a general hand shaking with the warm congratulations and the best wishes of all present. A large extension table was loaded with presents for the happy pair. We noticed two silver cake baskets, a silver castor, butter dish, besides pie knives, spoons, nut picks, etc. There was a fine china tea set, glass ware, with many other valuable presents too numerous to mention. We noticed that many of the presents came from friends living in Mass. E. E. Barker, our former station agent from Portland, was present. Our new Mrs. Hattie A. Brooks was our fashionable dressmaker and it is with regret that our people part with her.

Albion Bucknam keeps a well supplied market. We recently saw hanging upon the hooks, quarters of nice beef and fresh pork, chickens, etc., besides upon his table was sirloin steak 16 cts. per lb., sausages, 11 cts. per lb., cod fish, etc. A market like this should be well patronized.

S. B. Locke, esq., has returned from Mass., where he has been visiting the different Jersey Herd Farms. He reports himself as well pleased with what he saw.

The Butter Factory Company met at the school house last Saturday afternoon to hear the report of their committee, G. G. Dow, Ethan Willis and S. B. Locke, on the test of the the three creameries, Cooly's, Reid's and Collier & Crockett's. The committee reported in favor of the Cooly creamery for the following reasons, first, that the milk being submerged in water the creamery can be kept in most any place even in a barn without the danger of the cream becoming contaminated with bad odors, and cream being kept thus submerged never gets dry like that exposed to the air; second, with the Shaw cans, which can be used the milk can be skimmed at the bottom, the Coolys at the top; third, the cream on a small quantity of milk can be measured as well as a full can without water being added to the milk. The Reid creamery was highly recommended for family dairying but for co-operative purposes the Cooly is the best. An animated discussion followed the report of the committee and it was evident that the members present would be governed but little by their committee's test. Alden Chase of Woodstock, says there was no material difference in the quantity of cream raised by the different creameries.

[illegible] Curtis is buying corn and potatoes.

BUCKFIELD.

The new postmaster at Buckfield, Alfred Cole, esq., says the Oxford Democrat, has fitted up an office which is an honor to himself, to the citizens of Buckfield and to the administration which he represents. In an arcade building of dimensions about eighteen by thirty-two feet, Postmaster Cole is found surrounded by one hundred and eighty-three elegant call boxes—a patent design manufactured at Milford, N. H.—and a large number of Yale lock boxes, with plate glass fronts which would do honor to a larger place than Buckfield. A money order department is entirely independent of the delivery. The whole office is finished in oiled ash, the fine workmanship of the postmaster's brother, Edward G. Cole, of Buckfield. A fine new Diebold safe adorns the office, and all its arrangements are complete in every respect. Postmaster Cole is ably assisted by Miss Belle Bridgham, a graduate of Hebron Academy, and a daughter of Thomas S. Bridgham, esq., a prominent member of the Oxford bar.

Beware of Scrofula

Scrofula is probably more general than any other disease. It is insidious in character, and manifests itself in running sores, pustular eruptions, boils, swellings, enlarged joints, abscesses, sore eyes, etc. Hood's Sarsaparilla expels all trace of scrofula from the blood, leaving it pure, enriched, and healthy.

GREENWOOD.

A TRUE PIG STORY.—Many years ago Artemas Felt kept hotel in this town and James LeBroke was a neighbor who had a pig running loose and it used to annoy Felt very much. One day LeBroke came into the hotel and Felt said to him "there is a stray pig under my stable and if you will kill him I will give you a pint of rum." "I will do it," said LeBroke, "but I want the rum first." So it was put up and handed over and LeBroke took a drink and said "now I am ready." He procured a club and Felt went under the stable to drive the pig out while LeBroke stationed himself at the gang-way and killed the pig on the spot when it came out. He then discovered it was his pig and then he went for Felt and Felt went for the house. Many years after that if you mentioned LeBroke's pig to Felt his sides would shake with laughter. You mention it to LeBroke and you would have to keep clear of his long arms or get hit.

YOUR LIVER

Secretes the bile and is one of the most important organs of the human system. Jaundice, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Foul Stomach, Variable Appetite, Sallow Complexion, Constipation and all the ills that accompany them, are indications of Liver Complaint.

"I had a severe case of Liver Complaint with habitual constipation; my appetite would be good one day and poor the next, my eyes showed evidence of Jaundice, and I had a tired, uncomfortable feeling; I bought one bottle of Brown's Sarsaparilla. It regulated my liver and bowels so that their action is as good as ever. My general health is now good. I owe it all to the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla.
HON. D. D. THOMAS,
Treas. Penobscot Co., Bangor, Me."

"Father?" said a young man, working in Sargent's mill, in Brewer, Me., "are you going to Bangor to-night?" "Yes, my son, why?" "I want you to get me a bottle of Brown's Sarsaparilla. I am most out and don't want to be without it." The father, who keeps the boarding house at the mill, says his son was all run down, had no appetite, worked about one-half the time, and was always tired. Can now (thanks to Brown's Sarsaparilla) work every day, has good appetite, color has come into his face. He is sure that Brown's Sarsaparilla is wonderful in cases of general debility.

MR. E. COBB, one of the most prominent merchants of Bangor, has suffered from liver troubles for two years. Mr. Cobb has consulted good physicians, taken various remedies, but got little or no assistance until he began the use of Brown's Sarsaparilla. He says it is the best thing for Liver Complaint that ever came to his notice, and freely recommends it to his friends.

"I was all out of fix this Spring," said MR. L. O. OAKS, merchant at Garland, Me. "I read some of the testimonials, bought some of Brown's Sarsaparilla, took one bottle, and am to-day better than I have been for years. I recommend Brown's Sarsaparilla above all medicines I have as I know it to be good."

READER!—If you have any trouble with your kidneys you can find a certain relief for it by using Brown's Sarsaparilla.

Your money refunded if it does not do all claimed.

State on complaint of Jesse H. Field vs. Fred M. Skinner for assault and battery with intent to ravish, was tried before the Norway Municipal Court, Friday and Saturday, Jan. 29th and 30th. The respondent was found guilty of assault and battery, and a fine of ten dollars and costs was imposed, amounting in the whole to thirty-three dollars and twenty-seven cents. An appeal was taken to the February term of the S. J. Court. S. S. Stearns appeared for the State and C. E. Holt for the defence.

The Good Templars had an oyster supper Saturday evening. Several well known whist players were among the invited guests. It is said that Cole's wit always sparkling and apt, shot in meteor flashes right and left among the company. He got in a good joke on Webber. It is claimed that he did the honors for the guests to the full acceptance of the company and the entire satisfaction of his comrades. It is needless to explain that the Good Templars expect to rope these parties into the lodge.

In one of our stores the other night were three well-known imbibers of the ardent. One of them, whom we will call George, reclining on a settee, said. "I expect some one will be lecturing me on intemperance next." The second, whom we will designate as John, replied, "I can give you a lecture on intemperance." "Well, drive on," said the former. "I shan't till you are sober enough to appreciate it," was the response. The third whom we will name Elbridge, listened attentively to the conversation, but said nothing.

The gospel temperance meetings at the Methodist church Sunday afternoons are attracting a great deal of attention. Last Sunday there was the largest attendance since they were started. Seth Pike, a veteran in the work, ably presided over the meeting. Remarks were made by the President, Rev. O. S. Pillsbury, A. B. Chase, E. H. Brown, J. A. Bolster, J. F. Devine, C. S. Akers, Cummings of Gray, and others. A song was finely sung by Vira Lord. Mr. Pike will also preside next Sunday afternoon. We predict a large and enthusiastic meeting.

H. A. Bradbury writes that J. D. Wilson of Altamonte, Florida, met with a painful accident on Monday, the 25th instant. While at work at the planer a board flew back and hit the end of the thumb on his left hand, fracturing the second joint and dislocating the third. He is losing some sleep but is able to be about looking after his business. It is likely to be a number of months, however, before his hand is sound and able for use. We hear another drama is to be given Feb. 9th; this time for the benefit of the library. We hear the play is to be "Neighbor Jackwood."

W. H. Millard and George McKee, connected with the Paris Manufacturing Company, were in town last week.

"Neighbor Jackwood" is to be played by the S. P. D. Co. for the benefit of the South Paris Public Library next Tuesday night, in the New Hall. The play is under the direction and management of Prof. E. E. Parker, assisted by a strong cast of characters. Music by F. B. Knapp's Orchestra. The proceeds will go to buy new books for the Public Library.

"Ten Nights in a Bar Room," given by the Dirgo Dramatic Club last Friday evening, proved a success, financially and otherwise, spite of the rain the house filled early, and all present expressed themselves as well pleased with the entire performance. The villages Paris Hill and Norway were represented in the audience. Prof. Parker assumed the part of the clergyman, also the part of the Dutchman in the farce, another part in the latter was that of the dude impersonated by Prof. Parker's intimate friend and partner, Charles O. Cummings, who is already favorably known to the public as a successful young tenor vocalist, and who now seems likely to add to his other laurels dramatic honor, we predict a brilliant future for both gentlemen. Mr. Burbank assumed the Yankee with great skill. The Joe Morgan of Mr. Farrar was a fine piece of acting, as was also Miss Lizzie Winslow's Mehitable Cartwight, and Miss Bent's Mrs. Slade. In the part of Joe Morgan's wife, Mrs. Brown finds ample scope for her graceful acting. Mr. E. L. Blood as Harvey Green did his part to perfection; Nellie Morse in the character of Little Mary was charming; Mr. George Tucker as Simon Slade; Barrows and Purrington as Willie Hammond and Frank Slade are admirable. It does not often happen that so humble a club as the Dirgo wins fame by its perfect acting. The secret of it is that each performer did what he or she could to do with all the heart, and in a natural manner. It is well for the unfortunate to sometimes witness the entire panorama of a drunkard's life as represented in "Ten Nights in a Bar Room." It comes to us, that when the drama was played here some years ago one man, far along in years was saved by witnessing the picture, and remained true to his pledge unto the end. If only one be lifted, it were something of good to remember in connection with the play. The club will doubtless repeat the drama in some adjacent town. REPORTER.

Beautiful! was the exclamation of the beholders as they looked off on the hills and mountains last Satuday morning and saw the trees bending beneath their load of ice. Not so with those that tried to pass on the roads where the bending trees entirely barred further progress, or gave the unlucky passer a smart rap on the face, leaving a black spot on the side of the forehead as one lady showed us yesterday. Much damage has been done to young shade trees.

[Communication

MR. EDITOR.—My attention has just been called to the article in the ADVERTISER bearing the date of Jan. 8, wherein the writer expresses sympathy for the sad fate of the young gentleman, who has been measuring tape and things at the West Peru Grange store for the past season or so. It speaks well for the writer's heart. It shows that he feels for folks. Sympathy for others woes is always in order, but it is well not to suffer our sympathy to run away with everything else. And it is well not to rush into print, pell-mell, puffing and blowing, until we have some sort of an idea in regard to the subject we wish to spread. Many of us were red hot to condemn at the first but after getting an insight into the matter we have, mostly, retired from the condemning business. It is quite possible that the writer may not have caught even a glimpse of the facts that lie along the bottom. Agreeable to the young man's wish he was not hired for any definite time. I had this from his lips. When you hire a man in like manner to run your farming operations, and the time should come when he was not giving satisfaction, I fail to see why the neighbors should work themselves into a perspiration should you settle with him and dispense with his services, whether it was done after supper and before bedtime or in the morning after breakfast. And I apprehend that a jury of farmers, unless there was a blockhead among them, would agree that you had done nothing worthy of stripes, even though he had the burdens of the young man in question, with the addition of a crippled cousin or an asthmatic aunt. Those things do not enter into the complication at all. And now in regard to the alleged cause of removal, the postoffice affair, that is pure fiction, so I have been told on good authority. In the first place the present incumbent is not an "offensive partisan" and he is an efficient post-master, and is satisfactory to all parties concerned. The trustees claim that they never had a desire to institute a change like that, for somehow the idea had crawled through their hair that he, who was then the agent, would not be buying and selling goods for the Grange throughout the entire term of President Cleveland's administration. It pains my heart exceedingly to say to the writer, "You have been barking at an empty bole, my boy." GRANGER.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

OBITUARY.

Died in Jefferson, N. H., Jan. 14th, 1886, Gervacie C., only child of Asa K. and Lottie L. Bennett, aged 1 year, 4 months and 20 days, and only grandchild of the writer. Little Gervie was sick only one week with canker rash and scarlet fever, then the spinal meningitis set in. He was beloved by all who knew him, and very patient in all his sufferings, which were intense nearly all the time. The parents feel their loss deeply, but while they mourn they feel it is well with the child, and that he will be gathered with the rest of God's jewels in the morn of the Resurrection is their hope and comfort in this time of sorrow. MRS. E. A. SMALL.

While this institution ranks second to none as a preparatory for business, for teaching or for college, the expenses are far below those of other institutions claiming to do equal work. In its strong corps of instructors complete outfit, arrangements for boarding &c., this school offers unequalled advantages. Thirty-five dollars will do as much for a student here, as fifty-five in nearly all other schools.
Eighty-three teachers have attended this Academy during the past year and thirteen of its students have been admitted to college.

Old Memories.

BY TWILIGHT.

They thrill my whole being, they throng me to-night,
They bring back to me the sweet days of yore,
They bring things to mind that time in its flight
Had forgotten to leave on Oblivion's shore.
How well I remember the little brown cot,
That stood 'mong the trees on the brow of the hill;
Then I thought there could be no sunnier spot;
Long years have passed and I'm thinking so still.

On the slanting old roof the grey mosses clung,
The vines crept over the unpainted door;
In the morning the sun rose brightly and flung
His golden rays on the old kitchen floor.
The old-fashioned fire—I see it again,
The back-log on first and then other sticks.
The teakettle hung on the end of the crane,
Making music with crickets that lived 'mong the bricks.

Ah, too, I remember the family clock,
The old-fashioned watch that hung on the nail,
They seldom went wrong, and never would balk,
For to wind them both up father never would fail.
And when the cold storms were raging with out,
The winds blowing fiercely, and everything about,
How often I've seen my father look out
And say, "my dear children, I'm glad you're all here."

And still I remember when my dear father took
The family bible from the shelf where it laid,
And called us together and read from book;
Then on his knees for us fervently prayed.
We have laid him away in the church-yard to rest,
And beside him dear mother is sleeping;
The children are scattered, not one in the nest,
But old memories they all are keeping.
When the morning shall dawn of that happy day,
The bright day of an endless new year,
O, how sweet it would be hear father say,
"My dear children, I'm glad you're all here."

West Poland, Jan. 24, 1886.

"COME ASHORE."

BY ROBERT BUCHANAN.

During the whole of this time Mr. Monk had been watching her gloomily; and he had been watched in his turn by William Jones. At last the latter spoke:

"Matt's growed," said he; "she's growed wonderful. Lord bless us! she's a bit changed she is sin' that night when you found her down on the shore. Why, her own friends wouldn't know her!"

Mr. Monk started and frowned.

"Her friends?" he said—"what friends?"

"Why, them as owns her," continued William Jones. "If they wasn't all drownded in the ship what she came ashore from they must be somewheer. Mayhap some day they'll find her, and reward me for bringin' her up a good gal—that's what I allus tell her."

"So that's what you always tell her, do you?" returned Monk, grimly. "Then you're a fool for your pains. The girl's got no friends—haven't I told you that before?"

"Certainly you have, Mr. Monk," returned William Jones, meekly; "but look ye now, I think——"

"You've no right to think," thundered Monk; "you're not paid for thinking; you're paid for keeping the girl, and what more do you want?—Matt," he continued, in a softer tone, "come to me."

But Matt didn't hear—or, at any rate, did not heed; for she made no movement. Then Monk, gazing intently at her, gave vent to the same remark as William Jones had done a few hours before:

"Where have you been to-day," he said, "to have on that frock?"

Again Matt hung her head and was silent. Monk repeated his question; and, seeing that he was determined to have an answer, she threw up her head defiantly, and said, with a tone of pride in her voice:

"I put it on to be took!"

"To be took?" repeated Monk.

"Yes," returned Matt; "to have my likeness took. There be a painter chap here that lives in a cart; he's took it."

It was curious to note the changes in Mr. Monk's face. At first he tried to appear amiable; then his face gradually darkened into a look of angry suspicion. Matt never once withdrew her eyes from him—his very presence seemed to rouse all that was bad in her; and she glared at him through her tangled locks in much the same manner as a shaggy terrier puppy might gaze at a bull which it would fain attack, but feared on account of its superior strength.

"Matt," said Mr. Monk again, "come here."

This time she obeyed; she rose slowly from her seat and went reluctantly to his side.

"Matt, look me in the face," he said. "Do you know who this painter is?"

Matt shook her head.

"How many times have you seen him?"

"Twice."

"And what has he said to you?"

"A lot o' things."

"Tell me one thing?"

"He asked me who my mother was, and I told him I hadn't got none."

Mr. Monk's face once more grew black as night.

"So," he said, "poking and prying and asking questions. I thought as much. He's a scoundrelly vagabond!"

"No, he ain't," said Matt, bluntly.

"Matt, my girl," said Mr. Monk, taking no notice of her interruption, "I want you to promise me something."

"What is it?"

"Not to go near that painter again!"

Matt shook her head.

"Shan't promise," she said, "'cause I shall go. My likeness ain't took yet—he takes a time, he does. I'm going to put them things on to-morrow and be took again."

For a moment the light in his eyes looked dangerous, then he smiled and patted her cheek—at which caress she shrank away.

"What's the matter?" he asked.

"Nothing," said Matt. "I don't like to be pulled about, that's all."

"You mean you don't like me?"

"Don't know. That's telling."

"And yet you've no cause to hate me, Matt, for I've been a good friend to you—and always shall, because I like you, Matt. Do you understand, I like you?"

So anxious did he seem to impress this upon her that he put his arm around her waist, drew her toward him and kissed her on the cheek, a ceremony he had never performed before. But Matt seemed by no means to appreciate the honor; as his lips touched her cheeks she shivered, and when he released her she began rubbing at the place as if to wipe the touch away.

If Mr. Monk noticed this action on the part of the girl he deemed it prudent to take no notice of it. He said a few more pleasant things to Matt, and again patted her cheek affectionately; then he left the cottage, taking William Jones with him. Ten minutes later William Jones returned alone.

"Where's he?" asked Matt.

"Meanin' Mr. Monk, Matt—he be gone!" said William Jones.

"Gone for good?" demanded Matt, impatiently.

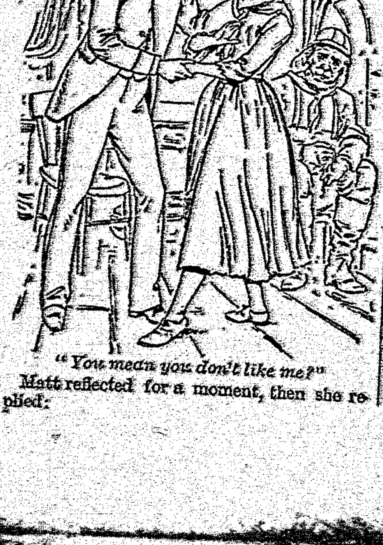
"No, he ain't, Matt; he'll be down here to-morrow, he will; and you'd best be at home!"

Matt said nothing this time; she only turned away sullenly and shrugged her shoulders.

"Matt," said William Jones, presently.

"Well?"

"Mr. Monk seems uncommon fond of you, he do."



"You mean you don't like me?"

Matt reflected for a moment, then she replied:

"I wonder what he's fond o' me for, William Jones?"

"Well, I dunno; 'cause he is, I suppose," returned William Jones, having no more logical answer at his command.

"Tain't that," said Matt; "he don't love me 'cause I'm me, William Jones. There's summat else, and I should like to know what that summat is, I should."

William Jones looked at her, conscious that there was a new development of sagacity in her character, but utterly at a loss to understand what that new development meant.

CHAPTER VI.

ALSO CONCLUDES WITH A KISS.

When Matt awoke the next morning, the first thing she did was to look around for her Sunday clothes, which on retiring to rest she had carefully placed beside her bed. They were gone, and in their place lay the habiliments she was accustomed to wear on her erratic pilgrimages every day.

Her face grew cloudy; she hunted all around the chamber, but finding nothing that she sought she was compelled to array herself as best she could.

"William Jones," she said, when she sat with that worthy at a hermit's breakfast of dry bread and whey, "where's my Sunday clothes?"

William Jones fidgeted a bit, then he said:

"They're put where you won't find 'em. Look ye now, Matt, you'd best be after doin' summat useful than runnin' about after a painter chap. I was down on the shore this morning, and I seen heaps o' wood—you'd best get some of it afore night!"

Matt gave a snort, but said nothing. A few minutes later her benign protector left the cottage, and a little after he had disappeared Matt issued forth; but instead of beating the shore for firewood, as she had been told to do, she ran across the fields to the painter.

She found him already established at his work. The fact was he had been for some time strolling about with his hands in his pockets and scanning the prospect on every side for a sight of her. Having got tired of this characteristic occupation, he at length sat down and began to put a few touches to the portrait. Seeing that he was unconscious of her approach, Matt crept up quietly behind him and took a peep at the picture.

Her black eyes dilated with pleasure.

"Oh, ain't it beautiful!" she exclaimed.

"So you have come at last," said Brinkley quietly, going on with his painting.

She made no movement and no further sound; so he continued:

"Perhaps, now you have come, you'll be good enough to step round that I may continue my work. I am longing to refresh my memory with a sight of your face, Matt!"

"Well, you can't," said Matt; "they're locked up!"

"Eh—what's locked up—my memory or your face?"

It was clear Matt could not appreciate banter. She saw him smile, and guessed he was laughing at her, and her face grew black and mutinous. She would have slunk off but his voice stopped her.

"Come here, Matt," he said. "Don't be silly, child; tell me what's the matter, and—why, what has become of your resplendent raiment—your gorgeous Sunday clothes?"

"Didn't I tell you?—they're locked up."

"Indeed?"

"Yes, William Jones done it 'cause he told him. He don't want me to come here and be took."

"Oh! Tell you what it is, Matt, we will have our own way in spite of them. For the present this picture shall be put aside. If in a day or so you can again don your Sunday raiment, and sit to me again in them—if not, I dare say I shall be able to finish the dress from memory. That portrait I shall give to you. In the meantime, as I want one for myself, I will paint you as you are. Do you approve?"

Matt nodded her head vigorously.

"Very well," said Brinkley. "Then we will get on."

He removed from his easel and carefully covered the portrait upon which he had been working. Then he put up a fresh cardboard, and sat down, inviting Matt to do the same.

With the disappearance of the Sunday clothes the girl's stiffness seemed to have disappeared also, and she became again a veritable child of nature. She looked like a shaggy young pony fresh from a race on the mountain-side, as she threw herself on the ground in an attitude which was all picturesqueness and beauty. Then, with her plump, sun-burned hand she began to carelessly pull up the grass, while her black eyes searched alternately the prospect and the painter's face.

Presently she spoke:

"He says you're a pryin' scoundrel," she said.

Brinkley looked up and smiled.

"Who is he, Matt?"

"Mr. Monk," she replied, and gave a jerk with her head in the direction of Monkshurst.

"Oh, indeed," said Brinkley. "It is my amiable equestrian friend, is it? I'm sure I'm much obliged to him. And when, may I ask, did he honor you with his opinion of me?"

"Last night, when he come to see William Jones. He said I wasn't to be took no more, 'cause you was a scoundrel, pokin' and pryin'."

Brinkley began to whistle, and went on for a while vigorously touching up his work. Then he looked up and regarded the girl curiously.

"Mr. Monk seems to be very much interested in you, Matt?"

The girl nodded her head vigorously; then, remembering the odious caress to which Mr. Monk had subjected her, she began to violently rub her cheek again.

"Why is Mr. Monk so interested in you? Do you know?"

"Praps it's 'cause he found me when I come ashore."

"Oh, he found you, did he? Then why doesn't he keep you?"

"He do, only I live along o' William Jones."

Again Brinkley began whistling lightly and working away vigorously with his brush. Presently the conversation began again.

"Matt, what things did you come ashore in?"

"I dunno!"

"You have never heard whether anything was found with you which might lead to your finding your relations?"

"No; no more has William Jones. He says maybe they'll find me some day and reward him, but Mr. Monk says they were all drownded, and I ain't got no friends 'cept him and William Jones."

"Well, since he found you, I suppose he ought to know; and since you have no relations, Matt, and no claim upon anybody in the world, it was very kind of Mr. Monk to keep you, instead of sending you to the work-house, as he might have done."

On this point Matt seemed rather skeptical.

"Well," continued Brinkley, as he went on lightly touching up his work, "perhaps I have done my equestrian friend a wrong. Perhaps his unamiable exterior belies his real nature—perhaps he is good and kind, generous to the poor, willing to help the helpless—like you, for instance."

"Is it him?" exclaimed Matt; "Monk, of Monkshurst! Why he don't give nothin' to nobody. No fear."

"And yet, according to your own showing, he has helped to support you all these years—you, who have no claim whatever upon him."

This was an enigma to which Matt had no solution. She said no more, but Brinkley, while he continued his painting, silently ruminated thus:

"It strikes me this puzzle would be worth unraveling if I could only find the key. Query, is the young person the key, if I but knew how to use her? Perhaps, since the amiable Monk evidently dislikes my coming into communication with her. But it would be useless to lay the case before her, since, if she is the key, she is quite unconscious of it herself."

He threw down his brush, rose and stretched himself, and said:

"Look here, Matt, I'm tired of work. The sun shining on those sandhills and on the far-off sea is too tempting. I shall go for a walk, and you, if you are in the mood, shall be my guide."

She evidently was in the mood, for she was on her feet in an instant.

"All right, master," she said, "I'll go."

"Very well. Tim, bring forth some refreshment. We will refresh the inner man and girl before we start."

Tim disappeared into the caravan. Presently he reappeared bearing a small tray, on which was a small flask of brandy, a large jug of milk, some biscuits and a couple of glasses. This he placed on the camp-stool, which his master had just vacated, and which, when not in use as a seat, served as a table. Brinkley poured out two glasses of milk, then, looking at Matt, he held the little flask on high.

"Brandy, Matt?"

She shook her head.

"Very well, child; I think you are wise. Here, take the milk and drink confusion to your enemies!"

Matt took the glass of milk, and drank it down, while Brinkley hastened to dilute and dispose of the other. Then he gave some orders to Tim, and they started off. As they had no particular object in view, they chose the pleasantest route, and clearly the pleasantest lay across the sandhills. Not because the sandhills were pleasant in themselves—they were not, especially on a day when the sun was scorching the roads and making the sea like a mill-pond—but because by crossing the sandhills one came, on the other side, upon a footpath which led, by various windings, gradually to the top of breezy cliffs.

To the sandhills, therefore, they wended their way. Having gained them, they followed a route which Matt knew full well, and which soon brought them to the narrow footpath beyond. During the walk she was singularly silent, and Brinkley seemed to be busily trying to work out some abstruse problem which had taken possession of his brain.

When they had followed the footpath for some distance and had gained the greensward on the top of the cliffs, the young man threw himself upon the grass, and invited Matt to do the same. It was very pleasant there, soothing both to the eye and to the mind. The cliff was covered—somewhat sparsely, it is true—with stunted grass; and just below, on their right, lay the ocean, calm as any mill-pond, but sighing softly as the water kissed the rocks and flowed back again with rhythmic throbs. On their left lay the sandhills, glittering like dusty gold in the sun-rays, while just before and below them was the village.

"Do you see that house standing all by itself, close to shore?" said Matt, pointing to the cottage where she lived. "That belongs to William Jones. And, look ye now, there be William Jones on the rocks!"

Looking down, Brinkley beheld a figure moving along the rocks, just where the water touched the edge.

"Very lazy of William Jones," he said. "Why isn't he at work?"

"At work?"

"Yes, tilling the fields or fishing. By the way, I forgot to ask you, is he a fisherman?"

"No, he ain't," said Matt. "He's a wrecker, he is!"

"A what?" exclaimed Brinkley.

"A wrecker," continued Matt, as if wrecking was the most natural occupation in the world. Brinkley looked at her, imagining that she must be practicing some wild joke. He had certainly heard of wreckers, but he had always believed that they were a species of humanity which had belonged to past centuries, and were now as extinct as a mammoth. But the girl evidently meant what she said, and thought there was nothing extraordinary in the statement.

"That sea don't look ugly, do it?" she continued, pointing at the ocean. "But it is; there's rocks out there where the ships split on; then they go all to pieces, and the things come ashore."

"And what becomes of all the things, Matt?"

"Some of 'em's stole, and some of 'em's took by the coastguards. They do say," she added, mysteriously, "as there's lots o' things—gold and silver—hid among them sandhills. Before the coastguards come all the folk was wreckers, like William Jones, and they used to get what come ashore, and they used to hide it in the sandhills."

"Indeed! Then, if that is the case, why don't they take the treasure up, and turn it into money?"

"Why? 'Cause them sandhills is allus changing and shifting about, they are; though they know well enough the things is there, there's no findin' of 'em."

"I always thought William Jones was poor?"

"So he is, he says!" replied Matt; "cause, though he be allus foraging, he don't find much now on account o' them coastguard chaps."

After they had rested themselves they went a little farther up the cliff, then they followed a narrow, winding path, which brought them to the shore below. Here Matt, who seemed to be pretty well grounded in the history of the place, pointed him out the wonders of the coast. She showed him the caves, which tradition said had been formerly used as wreckers' haunts and treasure stores, but which were now washed by the sea, and covered with slimy weeds; then she brought him to a promontory where they told her she herself had been found. This spot Brinkley examined curiously, then he looked at the girl.

"I suppose you had clothes on when you came ashore, didn't you, Matt?"

"Why, of course I had. William Jones has got 'em!"

"Has he? Where?"

"In his cave, I expect."

"His cave! Where is that?" asked Brinkley, becoming very much interested.

"Dunno," returned Matt; "perhaps it's somewhere hereabout. I've seen William Jones come about here, I have, but I never could track him."

We have received the February number of Ballou's Monthly. It gives a liberal instalment of that interesting Serial Story for the Ladies, The Gilberts; or, A Double Mistake, together with a large and miscellaneous assortment of complete stories by the best authors for all members of the family. Subscription price $1.50 per year, post-paid, G. W. Studley, Publisher, Boston, Mass.

St. Nicholas for February, 1885, has a richly varied table of contents. Among those articles which may be classed as timely is an out-door sketch, entitled "Fish-spearing through the ice," which showf how some clever boys improved on an ingenious Indian mode of fishing; "Badminton" a sort of indoor tennis for winter days, is the subject of a paper by C. L. Norton; Sophie Swett has an amusing "coasting" story, called "The Girl Who Lost Her Pocket"; and there are bright Valentine verses by Elizabeth Cummings, and others.

Our Little Ones and the Nursery for February has arrived with its beautiful pictures and stories to amuse the children this cold winter weather. It looks more cheerful and brighter than ever, if that were possible. Price $1.50 per year. Russell Publishing Co. 36 Bromfield St., Boston.

The "Popular Science Monthly," for February offers an unusually attractive group of papers of merit on topics of current interest and real importance. At their head stands an account of "The Improvement of East River and Hell Gate," by General John Newton, the originator of the plan and director of the works. This paper is historical and descriptive, beginning with an account of the original condition of Hell Gate, recording all that has been done toward clearing it out, with particular descriptions of General Newton's own work on Hallet's Point and other reefs, and detailed accounts of the operations and apparatus by which Flood Rock was undermined and blown up; to which is added an estimate of the work that is still to be done. The article is accompanied by new maps and illustrations. In "The Interpreters of Genesis and the Interpreters of Nature" are given Professor Huxley's criticisms of an article by Mr. Gladstone on the "Dawn of Creation and Worship." Mr. Henry James Ten Eyck has an important essay, of home and personal interest to every reader, on "Recent Experiments in State Taxation."

The publishers respectfully call attention to the fact that in the contents of the "mid-winter" Century may be found a remarkable variety of subjects of public moment; and an equally remarkable list of names connected with the history, literature and art of America. If this issue of the magazine has an inhospitable look to foreign contributors, who happen to be wholly and by accident excluded, they may find recompense of courtesy in the plain speech from forty-five American writers, on "International Copyright," spoken in the "Open Letters" department, and which is one of the most striking features of the number. Lowell opens the argument against literary theft with a quartrin in the most biting vein of Bigelow's humor; epigrams of satire, reason, justice, and exhortation from writers prominent in every branch of letter follow; and Whittier at the end speaks a few words of Quaker scorn of the American attitude to the subject more bellicose than avowed warfare.

The first prize was awarded Church & Co.'s "Arm & Hammer" Brand of Soda and Saleratus for its great purity and whiteness, at the World's Industrial and Cotton Centennial Exposition, New Orleans, 1885.

Sunday-School Lesson.

For February 7th.

The Fiery Furnace. Daniel iii, 16—28.

Notes.—"Shadrach," etc.—These were Babylonian names given in place of their real Jewish ones. Of these, Abed-nego is an error of copying for Abed-Nebo, which means, servant of the god Nebo. Perhaps a Jewish copyist changed it so as not to have the idol's name a part of the Jew's name.——"If it be so."—If he pleases.——"Burning, fiery furnace."—All sorts of cruel punishments are common enough in the East. We must not imagine this as a closed furnace, like our blast furnace, but a more open fire.——"The golden image."—The Babylonian accounts tell of similar immense images plated with gold.——"Seven times more."—That is, as hot as possible.——"Hosen."—Old English for hose, stockings; perhaps their loose trousers. The proper translation of these articles of clothing is not certain, as the margin of the Revision will show.——"The flame of the fire slew these men."—Because this was an open fire.——"Astonied."—Old English for Astonished. "Four men loose."—The fire had been permitted to burn only their cords.——"The fourth is like a son of the gods."—This translation of the Revision is much better than the Old Version, "the Son of God," which would imply an impossible knowledge on Nebuchadnezzar's part of the doctrine of the Trinity. He meant to say that there appeared one like an angel with the three men.——"Ye servants of the Most High God."—Probably the name by which the Jews spoke of Jehovah, as against the false gods.——"Satraps, deputies, and governors."—These are the regular names for the highest officers under the Persian rule, when this book was written.——"Blessed be the God of Shadrach," etc.—It must not be supposed that Nebuchadnezzar hereupon gave up idolatry to worship only the god of the Jews. He continued as long as he lived a mighty patron of his gods, and built their most magnificent temples.

Instruction.—If you are called to account for doing right, it is not necessary to go into a long argument, at the risk of finding that your opponent can talk as well as you can. It is enough to say, It is right, and I will do it; It is wrong, and I will not do it. All the talking in the world should not affect one who has made up his mind as to duty.

Whether God will deliver us in our trouble is not our business, but his. It is not necessary that we be delivered. It is only necessary that we do our duty and take the consequences. No consequences of doing wrong can be so bad as doing wrong itself is.

Those three Hebrew young men had learned the virtue of being able to say No. Anybody can say Yes, but it sometimes takes a hero to say No.

But there is a difference between conscience and stubbornness. A man may say No, because the act is wrong. That is conscience. Or he may say No because he wants to have his own way, and does not care if he is disagreeable. Christ bids us say Yes, if no matter of principle is involved. If a man asks you to go with him a mile, go with him twain. Be agreeable, helpful, yielding, when no principle is involved. Be stern, unyielding, resolute, when a real principle is involved.

Notice in the story of these three young men how violence and wickedness may triumph for a while. God let them be bound; he let them be cast into the furnace; he let them fall down into the fire. Don't think God has forsaken you because you get into trouble. The fire is not the end of it. The deliverance does not come until after the fire.

The fire of trial does not hurt one permanently. It ought to burn off the bonds of sin, and free one from them. However terrible it may seem at the time, or still more in anticipation, there will be no smell of fire; only deliverance from bonds.

The angels of God will walk with us in our trials. They encamp about his servants. He giveth his angel charge over thee. Often trial is the happiest time a man has, because then he is most consciously with God.

If we endure temptation and trial well, then it will be a lesson and encouragement to others. Nebuchadnezzar saw that God was with these young men.

It does not pay to cast other people into fiery furnaces. Keep yourself true, and don't spend your time in abusing other people for their conscience. You may get burned. One conscience is about as much as you can attend to, and that is your own. A vicarious conscience, a conscience concerned about other people, is not to be cultivated.

God finds it very easy to change the king's commandments or any body else's designs, if they are against him. God's counsel shall stand, and, if anybody wants his own counsel to stand, he must make it agree with that of God.

A Last Farewell.

ALBERT PIKE'S TOUCHING LETTER TO A DYING FRIEND.

Washington, Sept. 3, 1885.

MY DEAREST AND BEST AND TRUEST OLD FRIEND: I have just received your loving message sent to me by Mr. Sandels. I had already two days ago learned from our old friend Cush, who had the information from James Stewart, that you were about to go away from us. In a little while I shall follow you, and it will be well for me if I can look forward to the departure, inevitable for all, with the same patience and equanimity with which you are waiting for it.

I do not believe that our intellect and individuality cease to be when the vitality of the body ends. I have a profound conviction, the only real revelation, which to me makes absolute certainty, that there is a Supreme Deity, the Intelligence and Lord of the universe, to whom it is not folly to pray. That our convictions come from Him; and in them He does not lie to or deceive us; and that there is to be for my very self another, a continued life, in which this life will be as if it had never been, but I shall see and know again those whom I have loved and lost here.

You have led an upright, harmless and blameless life, always doing good, and not wrong and evil. You have enjoyed the harmless pleasures of life and have never wearied of it, nor thought it had not been a life worth living. Therefore you need not fear to meet whatever lies beyond the veil.

Either there is no God, or there is a just and merciful God, who will deal gently and tenderly with the human creatures whom He has made so weak and so imperfect.

There is nothing in the future for you to fear, as there is nothing in the past to be ashamed of. Since I have been compelled by the lengthening of the evening shadows to look forward to my own nearly approaching departure, I do not feel that I lose the friends who go away before me. It is as if they had set sail across the Atlantic sea to land in an unknown country beyond, whither I soon shall follow to meet them again.

But, dear old friend, I shall feel very lonely after you are gone. We have been friends so long, without a moment's intermission, without even one little cloud or shadow of unkindness or suspicion coming between us, that I shall miss you terribly. I shall never have the heart to visit Van Buren again. There are others whom I like there, but none so dear to me as you—none there or anywhere else. As long as I live I shall remember with loving affection your ways and looks and words, our glad days passed together in the woods, your many acts of kindness, the old home and the shade of the mulberries, and an intimate communion and intercourse during more than 45 years.

I hoped to be with you once more in the woods, but now I shall never be in camp in the woods again. The old friends are nearly all gone; you are going sooner than I to meet them. I shall live a little longer, with little left to live for, loving your memory, and loving the wife and daughter who have been so dear to you. Dear, dear old friend, good-bye! May our Father who is in heaven have you in His holy keeping and give you eternal rest. Devotedly your friend,

ALBERT PIKE.

BILIOUSNESS.

Bilious symptoms invariably arise from indigestion, such as furred tongue, vomiting of bile, giddiness, sick headache, irregular bowels. The liver secretes the bile and acts like a filter or sieve, to cleanse impurities of the blood. By irregularity in its action or suspensions of its functions, the bile is liable to overflow into the blood, causing jaundice, sallow complexion, yellow eyes, bilious diarrhœa, a languid weary feeling and many other distressing symptoms. Biliousness may be properly termed an affection of the liver, and can be thoroughly cured by the grand regulator of the liver and biliary organs, BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. It acts upon the stomach, bowels and liver, making healthy bile and pure blood, and opens the culverts and sluiceways for the outlet of disease. Sold everywhere and guaranteed to cure.

Dr. JOHN F. TRUE'S

Pin Worm Elixir!

A GREAT DISCOVERY!

It is claimed to be the safest, most potent, and most effectual remedy known for child-killing Disease. As a cathartic vermifuge it has no equal. Testimony in its favor comes in from all sections where it is known. It not only effectually removes from the system these troublesome and disagreeable worms, but children who have been weak and puny for years are at once improved and restored to health by its use. Being a mild and gentle laxative, it is a corrective of the highest value. It is purely vegetable and cannot be beat. It has also expelled lizards, one eight inches in length, is spotted, belongs to the water species, and looks like a veritable young alligator. Fits caused by worms and indigestion.

MANHOOD

HOW LOST, HOW RESTORED.

Just published, a new edition of Dr. Culverwell's Celebrated Essay on the radical cure of Spermatorrhœa or Seminal Weakness, Involuntary Seminal Losses, Impotency, Mental and Physical Incapacity, Impediments to Marriage, Etc.; also, Consumption, Epilepsy and Fits, induced by self-indulgence, or sexual extravagance, etc.

The celebrated author, in this admirable essay, clearly demonstrates from a thirty years successful practice, that the alarming consequences of self-abuse may be radically cured; pointing out a mode of cure at once simple, certain, and effectual, by means of which every sufferer, no matter what his condition may be, may cure himself cheaply, privately and radically.

This lecture should be in the hands of every youth and every man in the land.
